

GLOBAL HEALTH HOT TOPIC:

Health services in Latin America

CABI's Global Health database enables the work of researchers, practitioners and trainers at leading public health schools, as well as research from around the world.

Health systems and services in Latin America have undergone rapid transformation in recent years with advances in treatment, care and accessibility. But, even the most robust health system can collapse in a catastrophe - whether under political pressure, in economic turmoil or in a health crisis like COVID-19.

Latin American health services provide care over vast areas and to large populations with changing demographics. Yet, many services are under-resourced or lack strong co-ordination between policymakers and on-the-ground practitioners, creating complex problems for those trying to deliver care to the most vulnerable in society.

Introducing CABI's Global Health database

CABI's world-renowned Global Health database gives researchers, students and practitioners unparalleled access to all the world's relevant public health research and practice – providing knowledge without borders.

Global Health unmatched access to the world's relevant public health research and practice, completing the picture of international medical and health research by capturing key literature that is not covered by other databases.

“It is the norm for systematic reviewers at the LSHTM to include the Global Health database in order to be comprehensive”

– Dr Bayard Roberts, The London School of Hygiene & Tropical Medicine
